

Unaccounted faces

Jing Yuan

Among the crowd, we wear what fits—blank masks shaped by unseen rules.
Who am I, who are they?
We are flattened by countless measures:
scores, statistics, IDs, or ranks—
pressed into shapes that are easier to count but harder to recognize.
We fit the frame, but lose the face.

